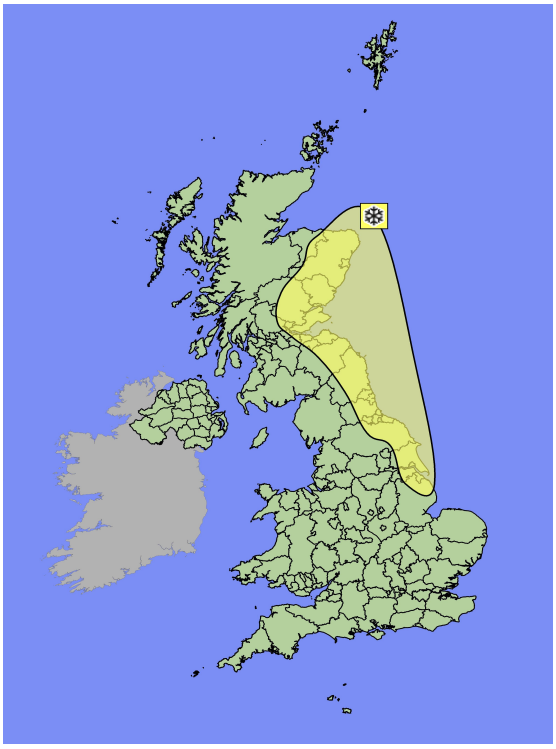
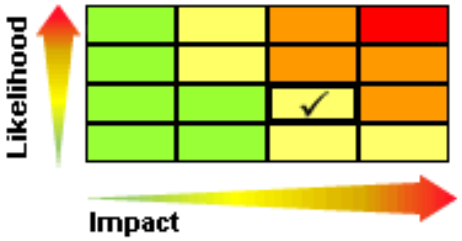
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Part of a frontal zone affecting eastern and southeastern England on Sunday is thought likely to spread into parts of northeastern England and eastern Scotland during Monday. This frontal zone will lead to some snow inland with accumulations in excess of 10cm possible above 300m or so and blizzards are also likely over high ground. Meanwhile, over lower lying coastal areas a mixture of rain, sleet and snow is expected so any accumulations here are expected to be small and patchier in nature. There is greater than average uncertainty regarding the northern and western extent of this rain, sleet and snow and an update to this alert is expected on Saturday.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Mon, 21st Jan 2013 until 23:59 on Mon, 21st Jan 2013

A band of rain, sleet and snow accompanied by strong easterly winds is expected to affect parts of northeastern England and eastern Scotland on Monday. Accumulations in excess of 10cm are possible over high ground whilst over lower lying coastal areas any accumulations are expected to be small. The public should be aware of the risk of disruption to travel.
